The Old and Almost from Louisiana.

The Boston Press's Washington correspondence describes the Hon. J. W. Menard, of Louisiana, thus: Menard is a young mulatto, thirty years of age, and of medium stature. He speaks fluently but incoherently, and proposes to be a politician of no mean pretensions. He says he is the grandson of Gen. Menard, who emigrated from the Province of Louisiana to Illinois before that State became a member of the Union. Menard lived on a farm in Southern Illinois until he was 19, when he removed to the northern part of the State. There he worked during the summer months, and attended school during winter. In 1850 he entered Liberia College, Ohio, where he remained until 1861, when he visited Canada, returning to the United States in 1862. He entered the army as hospital steward in this city, but remained only a few months, when he was assigned to a desk in the Immigration Bureau of the Interior Department. The prejudice exhibited toward him in his official position soon induced him to resign, and disgusted with the Government, he sailed for British Honduras. Here he was employed by the British Honduras Company to make an exploration of the country, which he did to the satisfaction of the Government. He next visited Jamaica and Hayti, returning to New York in 1865. Here he remained but short time, and again shipped for New Orleans, where he arrived in September, and as he says, commenced at once to organize the Republican party of the South. He avows himself a Radical of the Wendell Phillips school, and says he has no use for military and water men like Fessenden and Trumbull.

An Indian Battle Scene.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette gives another account of the late Indian attacks on Col. Forsyth's command. The following extract, however, is sufficiently interesting to quote: "Again the men dug for their lives and soon were tolerably well shielded by the friendly sand, which, being soft they had thrown up with great rapidity. A hole was scraped out, in the center of the little island, and in this the dead and wounded were laid. The Indian warriors now seen approaching again, and the devoted band prepared to sell their lives as dearly as possible. Their fainting and bleeding leader, as he heard the yell of the coming savages, raised himself up and cautioned his comrades to be cool and make every shot tell, for they had only sixty-five rounds to the man. The struggle was fierce and bloody, but the Indians were again repulsed. Once more the chiefs rallied their warriors, and sought to inspire them with brave deeds by hurrahs; then some of these addresses were delivered in a loud voice, and so near the besieged that nearly every word could be distinctly heard. Sharp, who had formerly lived with the Indians, and understood their language well, interpreted what was being said. One Sioux chief, pointing to the sixty horses of our scouts, said: 'see their ponies they have only a few, and these meagre and thin, and there are no more men than horses, for they never go as we do, two upon one horse. We are hundreds; they less than one to one. Shame on you, warriors, to let this handful of a few drive you back.' The women and children appeared on the hills, clapping their hands and singing their war song, and the chief continued: 'Look at your women, a few children; they come down to see you brave, but you are ashamed of your soldiers, and they are ashamed of you. Come, now, let us kill the pale face.' While these speeches were going on the great and brave man appeared in full regalia, and, beating his drum, he sang a song, which amounted in substance to this: 'The medicine is good; the Great Spirit is with us; the bullets of the pale faces won't strike the brave; only cowards are killed by them; I am no coward of them. You must kill the white soldiers, or the Great Spirit will forsake us; our medicine be bad, our children and women die of starvation. Warriors be brave.' He sang in a loud monotonous voice riding around in circles swinging his body to and fro, and beating furiously with a stick upon his drum. To show how harmless the bullets of the whites were, the medicine man rode around the fort, beating the drum, and singing about his good medicine and bravery. An old scout, who had been wounded early in the fight and who had been watching the medicine man, fired at him, and the ball whistled so close, that the great medicine man withdrew to a greater distance to perform his antics, and preach to the young braves about the safety of fighting the pale faces. Raising himself up in the same hole, the young scout again drew bead on the Great Medicine as he approached, and this time with effect, for the Indian was seen to reel in his saddle, and drop his drum stick, as his pony carried him off. 'He has got his medicine,' said the scout, as, exhausted with pain, he fell down in the damp trench."

SEVEN DEADLY SINS.—First—Refusing to take a newspaper. Second—Taking a newspaper and not paying for it. Third—Not advertising. Fourth—Getting married and not sending the prints any of the wedding cake. Fifth—Making the printing office a loafing place. Sixth—Reading the manuscript on a compositor's case. Seventh—Never paying your subscription until the publisher goes to the expense and trouble of asking for it.

ACCIDENT AT ENOSBURGH FALLS.—We are indebted to the Richmond Sentinel for the following account of an accident at Enosburgh Falls.

As Mr. James Sargeant and his wife, and a Miss Farnsworth, were crossing the bridge at Enosburgh Falls, a few days since, just as the team was about to get to the top of the bridge, which crosses the canal leading to the saw-mill, one of the horses became frightened and started suddenly, and there being a jog at the end of the bridge of about five inches, from the top of the plank to the ground, the back seat on which the ladies were, being loose, tipped over backwards to the ground, and the ladies striking upon the back of their heads, and sustaining severe injuries. Mrs. Sargeant was taken up in a ambulance and removed to the dwelling of Mr. F. H. Jones, where she was properly cared for by the family. D. A. J. Farnsworth was injured, and on the day of two Miss Sargeants was removed to her home in the east part of the town, where she lies in a critical condition. Miss Farnsworth was not so seriously hurt, but is not yet entirely recovered from her injuries.

WHY NOT.—The New York Tribune thinks that General Grant's could have done for use in the coming months, or the following effect:

WASHINGTON, D. C. HEADQUARTERS OF THE U. S. ARMY.

My Dear Sir: In 18— (here insert the name of the year) while I was yet (here insert an infant, a boy, a student, a farmer, a tanner, a stockkeeper, a captain, a major, a colonel, a general, as the case may be), and was residing in (Point Pleasant, West Point, Fort Brown, Detroit, St. Louis, Galena, Washington, or a case may be), you were the first man to nominate me for the presidency. I accept my thanks, and the appointment of (postmaster, a senator, clerk, whiskey inspector, cabinet officer, consul, as the case may be), and believe me as ever, my dear Sir, Smith, Jones, Brown, Jenkins, White, Green, Thompson, as the case may be), your grateful friend. ULYSSES S. GRANT. [See directories for full name.]

A DAMPER.—Lieutenant-General Sherman, as is now well known, is not the nearest of mortals, and one day, in intimate friend, in the Army of the Tennessee, asked him why he dressed so.

"I'll tell you," said the General. "When I was a Second Lieutenant, I was ordered one day to Washington City, and went in all the glory of a brand new uniform. I was standing in front of the hotel, sunning myself, and quietly smoking my cigar, when I became aware that I had attracted the attention of a number of small boys, who gathered around in such numbers, and with such admiring countenances upturned to mine, that I could but notice them. As I did so, one of the boldest of them pike up in a loud voice and asked, 'Mister, where is your engine going to quit?'"

Gen. Sherman has never been guilty of a completely new uniform; he buys his uniforms in detachments, and wears them out in instalments.

Consumption Infections.

By DR. HENRY I. BOWDITCH.

(FROM THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY OF APRIL '67.) It was our fortune to attend a man slowly dying of consumption, who, while hopelessly and helplessly ill, was devotedly cared for by his wife, who, as we time felt herself, and seemed to be in perfect health. Years after her husband's death, and when she was bravely battling against disease, which commenced its insidious attacks immediately subsequent to his death, she related to me the following fact, only on my definite inquiries as to how intimate her relations had been with him during his illness. It seems that often, in wintery nights, with the woman would arise from the bed of her husband, who was lying with a dress of increasing disease, and would reassure him to take her warm clothing, and to lie down in the dry warm place. She had just let, while, as you throw your blanket over it she would take the spot that had been previously occupied by him! Upon our expressing a horror at the thought of the danger she had run, and which apparently had told with so much power upon her, she quietly remarked that she knew at the time the danger to which she was incurring. She had thought of danger to herself, and only of her husband's comfort. "But," added she, "I then got what I have never recovered from." A certain "itaiy" seemed to go out of her; and though her nature contended for many years against the encroachments of the disease, she finally died, always believing that she had taken consumption from her husband, and with a certain martyr-like joy that such had really been the fact.

We have now in our mind other and analogous cases, as, for example, husbands having their first cough when inhaling the breath of their sick wives, while ministering to their necessities. We have known daughters and sisters, who, full of apparent health and strength when consumption has seized a mother or sister have continued to sleep with the invalid, and to breathe the same closed-up atmosphere at night, and to watch all day without perhaps a moment of healthful out-of-door exercise. And we have been distressed to find not a few of such healthy young persons gradually beginning to suffer with indigestion, debility, and finally cough, and all the symptoms of consumption. In some instances, in fact, the attendant has died before the life of the original patient has ended. These acts are very significant; and although we are well aware that, in some of them, other elements of disease may have had their full influence, still the cases have been full of suggestions as to the necessities of greater precautions than we, in this country, have usually taken in this matter.

EXTENSION OF FRANCHISE.—The bill introduced by Mr. Wilson on the 13th instant, in the Senate, to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia, provides for a riking out the word "male" in the first section of election laws of this District now in force, and that every word in said acts applicable to persons of the male sex shall apply equally to persons of the female sex, so that hereafter women who are inhabitants of the District of Columbia, an citizens of the United States, may vote at all elections and be eligible to all civil offices in said District, on the same terms and conditions in all respects as men.

PLANCHETTE.—The Louisville Journal copies this yarn: In Bromsville, Texas, recently three gentlemen were amusing themselves with planchette. Several questions were answered, and the questioner strove to rise, but could not, and when it was proposed to break the circle, it was found that either of the three could rise from his seat. Consternation seized upon them as was plainly depicted upon their countenances, when, a moment after, the lady of the mansion entered the room. Surprised at the sight presented by the gentlemen, she, in agony of spirit cried out "Good God, what's this?" On this instant planchette became violently agitated, and the writing leg was broken; the charm or spell which had held the gentlemen composing the circle was dispelled, and they arose silently from their seats, and, in a short time, to all appearance, became themselves again.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To Physicians.

New York, August 15th, 1867. Allow me to call your attention to my PREPARATION OF COMPOUND EXTRACT OF BUCHU. The component parts are BUCHU, Louse Leaf, CUBEBES, JUNI, and BERRIES.

MODE OF PREPARATION.—Buchu, in cases, Juniper Berries, by distillation, to form a fluid. Oil extracted by displacement by alcohol, and the action of the alcohol, containing very little water, is small proportion of spirit, and more palatable than any now in use. The active properties are by it more extracted. Buchu, as prepared by druggists, generally, is of a dark color. It is a plant that grows in the mountains of the Cape of Good Hope, and is a native principle, having a dark and glistening decoction. This is the color of ingredients. The Buchu in my preparation predominates; the smallest quantity of the other ingredients is added, to give it ferment. This preparation, in fact, is a tonic, and is a medicine, as made in Pharmacopoeia, but it is a syrup—and therefore can be used in cases, where no inflammation exists. In this, you have a knowledge of the ingredients and the mode of preparation, and you will not be misled.

Having that you will verify it with a trial, and upon inspection it will meet with your approval. With a feeling of confidence, I am, very respectfully, H. T. HELMBOLD.

A Chemist and Druggist of 10 Years' Experience in Philadelphia, and has had a long and successful career in the use of this drug and chemical. Warehouse, 524 Broadway, New York.
